Derco and Riveer Environmental introduce the Clear Water Rinse System

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Feb. 2, 2009 – Derco Aerospace, a Sikorsky Aerospace Services company, and Riveer Environmental introduced the Clear Water Rinse System (CWRS), a new taxi-through rinse system for all fixed-wing fighter aircraft. Sikorsky Aerospace Services is the worldwide aftermarket business of Sikorsky Aircraft Corp., a subsidiary of United Technologies Corp. (NYSE: UTX).

Applicable to any fighter aircraft, the CWRS requires minimal set-up and allows for almost immediate operation. The CWRS is designed to operate automatically and washes the entire outer structure of an aircraft in less than one minute. Additionally, the system is environmentally friendly, recycling 80 percent of the water used in an aircraft rinse.

“Derco is pleased to team with Riveer Environmental to provide our customers with the Clear Water Rinse System for their fighter aircraft,” said Brian Holt, Senior Vice President of Sales and Marketing. “This solution allows our customers to significantly reduce costly aircraft repair by preventing the build-up of corrosive elements through regular washes.”
